Cottage for Christmas Gift.
The Christmas gift of a Los Angeles (Cal.) man, ill in a hospital, was a completely furnished cottage which 32 friends built for him in one day, completing their work by the light of a powerful motorcar lamp. All the workmen were fellow members with their friend of a fraternal insurance order. Their sick man is the sole support of an eighty-three-year-old mother.

RECOGNIZED WORK OF BIRDS

Occasion When Growers of Grain Requested to Appeal to Save Their Friends From Extinction.

Three hundred million dollars' worth of the cotton crop was damaged by the cotton boll weevil in the last year and birds, especially quail, consider such fare a treat and have a fondness for ridding the farmer of the enemies of his crops. What the good birds do in the destruction of insects injurious to man's interests is little short of marvelous.

One year at the headquarters of the National Audubon society a wire came stating: "Birds are dying in Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri in great numbers—result of sleet and snow." In response to the wire $300 worth of grain, seed and chaff was distributed, together with grit, to the birds and saved many of the insectivorous birds and game birds. The postmaster general ordered the rural mail carriers to distribute the feed free of charge.

New Industry for Detroit.
It is estimated that $10,000,000 worth of the 1918-17 fur exports will pass into the American channels before next June. The manufactured product, of course, will more than double these figures, for every one who touches a skin increases the profit which the ultimate purchaser must pay to the ancient industry. The cream of this new business will center in Detroit, one of the big fur manufacturing points of the country, New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, St. Louis and other cities.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Washington Caring for Many French Orphans

WASHINGTON.—Within the last year 160 war orphans of France have been "adopted" by Washingtonians, according to Miss Harriet Winslow, secretary-treasurer of the Fatherless Children of France, an organization formed for the relief of such children. Some of these children have been taken for two years, and some for longer periods.

Among the later subscribers to the organization are the Hyattsville high school, the Potomac school, St. John's Friends school, Kendall Green Sunday school, the Misses Mares' French school, the Lafayette Memorial subscription, the Marie Louise millinery establishment and the Home club, the Current Events club of Hagerstown, Md., and St. Mary's school of Knoxville, Tenn., also have "adopted" French children made fatherless by the war. At present there are in Washington four subscription clubs that have taken over part of the care of such children. These clubs consist of several members.

The French government is paying half the amount of money required to rear and educate the children of men killed in the war, giving $36.50 a year. The sum of $73 a year is needed for each child, and the people of France look to the United States to help by giving the other half.

The country so far has responded well, but more efforts are necessary. The periods for which some children have been taken are about to expire, and every day there are hundreds more children made dependent upon the support of their government and the people of the United States.

Washington especially has done well. In addition to the 160 children "adopted" more than $4,000 has been subscribed to a general fund.

How China Keeps Watch on Its Students Here

AN ultra-American brick dwelling, which stands in one of the capital's best residential districts, is the Chinese educational mission. The mission is an institution, but it is also a home. It is the official home or headquarters of all those Chinese students who are studying in American colleges and universities—at present some 500 in number.

Here T. T. Wong, an energetic young Chinaman who speaks excellent English, keeps track of the educational advancement of each Chinese student sent to America, while Mrs. Wong writes them motherly letters of good advice. If a student falls in Latin or gets too many colds the Wong family goes to his university and inquires into the causes. Formerly when the Chinese government sent young men to American universities there was no system of supervision whatsoever and often all trace of the student was lost. He might turn up seven years later a graduate of Yale or Harvard, but meantime the government did not know what had become of him, unless it took the trouble to communicate with his university, and this required a good deal of time and was not always satisfactory. Any great catastrophe might happen to a man's family and the government would be weeks or months in locating him and getting the information to him.

Under these circumstances, the need of some central means of communication with every Chinese student in America from New England to California was apparent, so the Chinese educational mission was established. It is located within walking distance of the Chinese embassy, which is consulted in affairs of importance.

The Chinese government has been sending students to America to be educated since 1875, but in the beginning, as has been said, there was no system. An occasional youth who showed strong indications of becoming a scholar was sent over, but in many cases was recalled before he had finished his course because the government was unopposed as to his movements and could not understand what kept him so long. Then in 1900 came the Boxer uprising and China was compelled to pay the United States government an enormous indemnity, half of which was to be returned to China with the provision that it be used to educate Chinese students in America.

Plan for National Athletic Field Progresses

THAT stadium in East Potomac park, which is designed as the eventual grounds for the holding of all national championships in all sports, has moved a little bit nearer. It will take $1,545,000 to build the great athletic field and recreation ground on the shores of the Potomac, which the A. A. U. would like to see and which Representative Murray Hulbert of New York has sought in a bill now before congress.

Congress has already granted $85,000 of the amount deemed necessary. This provides a shelter house and a part of the boat harbor. Representative Hulbert wants congress to go further.

"I want to get all the amateur athletes in the United States interested in this proposition," said Congressman Hulbert, "and then with all such pushing, watch how it will advance."

"This is a great proposition for the District, and it is a great proposition for all the boys and girls of the United States who are interested in clean sport. When we have our next hearing I hope to have representatives from all parts of the United States present to boost this plan."

"Clean, healthy sport means clean, healthy boys and girls, and I consider it a very essential part of our education. If we get this big stadium and recreation grounds in Washington and have national schoolboy and schoolgirl championships here every year, it is a great stimulus to the high school boys and girls to get out and try to make their mark in sports."

"A trip to Washington is an epoch in the lives of most schoolchildren, and if we had this grand concourse where they could meet and strive for national honors it would prove a great stimulus to sport."

"You can say for me that I don't propose to let this matter slumber. While I am in congress I will work to the utmost for this proposition. Not for the District, but for the boys and girls of the United States."

Redfield's Search for Medal-Winning Heroes

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE REDFIELD is gradually rounding up the heroes on the American S. S. Kroonland, who were voted medals by congress for rescuing 89 persons from the burning steamer Voltorno in the North Atlantic in October, 1913. The men, mostly foreigners, scattered all over the globe, after congress had recognized their bravery, and for more than two years Secretary Redfield has been trying to get in touch with them. He has been successful in many instances, but still has 11 medals awaiting claimants.

The latest to be found were Franz von Hymen, now at the western front with the German army, who was located by the American consul general at Antwerp, Belgium, and J. A. Roll, who was discovered at Galveston, Tex. The secretary is still seeking Helme M. P. Janssen, Gerard Franz Borrenberg, Franz Quendau, Henry Guelinck, Heinrich Schnub, Desire Auguste Coopman, Ernst Benecke, Petrus Stobbehaar, Leon Coppens, Gustav Ebling and August Friedrich Beckzuegl. The belief here is that these men, like Von Hymen, have been drawn into the European conflict, and it is feared some of them, at least, may have given their lives on battlefields without ever having known that the American congress had officially praised their heroism.

YES! MAGICALLY! CORNS LIFT OUT WITH FINGERS

You say to the drug store man, "Give me a small bottle of freezone." This will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

A few drops of this new ether compound applied directly upon a tender, aching corn relieves the soreness instantly, and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, dries up and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This new way to rid one's feet of corns was introduced by a Cincinnati man, who says that freezone dries in a moment, and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without irritating the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to order a small bottle from his wholesale drug house for you.—adv.

DORCAS' DAY LILIES

By ISABEL FROST.

A large tub, half-sunken in the earth, with myrtle and wandering Jew rambling over it, stood out in the front garden. Spider lilies and nasturtiums grew in their season around it, but in the tub itself were planted only day lilies.

They bloomed late. Dorcas used to watch and wait for them the year round. Somewhere she had read that they were the asphodels of the gardens of heaven, and surely their perfume confirmed it. It seemed the essence of all the lilies.

It made her think of all the things she had ever longed for and missed, all the little ungratified hopes of her girlhood. It swept away the years of nursing her bed-ridden mother, then her father, and keeping house for her brother Luke at the old home. She was thirty-five now, "gone by," as the saying was out in the country. Yet to those who loved her Dorcas was like one of her own fall lilies that bloomed late and sweetest of all in the garden.

She was out early one morning. And as she leaned over the lilies, Doctor Fellows' buggy stopped at the gate. "Heard the news, Miss Wimbledon?" he called. "Cary's sold his farm and he's going West."

Dorcas bent her head over the tub of lilies.

"I'm so glad for him," she said. "He's always wanted to get away, ever since he was a boy."

They had been sweethearts once, back in Dorcas' girlhood. And then, when Cary had asked her to be his wife, she had laughed at him.

"I'll myself down to a lifetime of housework right over there? Don't you suppose I'm tired of looking out at this valley every day of the year, Cary Roberts? I'm going away to study and make something of myself. You can stick here if you want to, but I'm going."

She had meant it, too; meant it with the belief that in her heart that he would never stay behind, that he would follow her. And instead, they had both lived on there, with her words between them.

And now, at last, the barrier had fallen for Cary. He had sold out, and was going away. She saw Luke and the hired men coming slowly down from the hill pastures where they had been stacking cornstalks, and realized she was delaying dinner. When they came up to the house she was in the kitchen, and Luke, after one glance at the half-set table, grumbled. She heard him go outdoors again, but paid no attention until she went to the door to call him, 15 minutes later. He had been cutting out some dead canes from the bushes along the side of the walk and pulling up dried flower stems. But all Dorcas saw was an emptied tub tossed over the paling fence and scattered earth with some dry lilies on the ground.

"Why—Luke—" she faltered. "What are you doing to my lilies?" "I needed the tub," said Luke curtly. "Dinner ready?"

She knew Luke's action was due to pure sullen spite, boyish, in a way, because she had been late with dinner. Yet it seemed to typify everything, all the years of crushed romance and sentiment, and the lack of them in her brother's nature. She turned without a word, and went back to the kitchen. And later in the afternoon, alone in the house, she sat upstairs in her own room that looked across the river, watching Cary's red chimneys and making up her mind. It wasn't too late. She packed rapidly, dragging down an old-fashioned, round-topped trunk out of the attic, and filling it with her best things. She would go away, too.

Suddenly she heard a knock at the side door. Hoping it was no woman neighbor, she ran down the front stairs lightly, and found Cary standing there.

"Hello, Dorcas," he said, with a boyish ring in his tone. "Heard the news, ain't you? I've sold out, and I've come for you. Took a long time to do it, but I'm here."

"Why, Cary Roberts!" Dorcas said, biting her under lip and backing away from him. "After all these years?"

"It ain't too late, is it? I had to stick to my price, and I've got it, three thousand, seven in cash. Dorcas! And I've got some put by in the bank, besides what the stock will bring. You ain't going to stand back now, and say no, are you?"

"Cary," her voice was full of determination now. She gave a swift glance at the sun just dipping to the West. "Luke's been real small to me today, and I didn't give him any reason, either. I've lived here and done for him for years and all I've had is the egg money. And, Cary, do you know what I've been doing all the afternoon? Packing up to go away."

"You poor little thing," he said, gently, one hand laid on her shoulder. "How soon would you be ready to go?" It was after six when Doctor Fellows drove along past the Wimbledon house. Luke stood by the front gate, his hair rumpled, a curiously puzzled, dejected look on his face.

"Seen anything of Dorcas, doctor?" he asked. "She seems to have lit out, and I reckon she's gone down to her grandma's."

"No, she hasn't Luke," chuckled the doctor. "She's eloped with Cary Roberts. I saw the two of them take the 5:10 train down to Hartford."

Sunk by Icebergs.

Admittedly the worst danger menacing transatlantic travelers in modern days, with steamers of such speed as are plying on the Atlantic, is that of collision with icebergs in a dense fog. It is morally certain that the mysterious disappearance of big steamers like the Naronic and the Huronian in more recent years and of many others previously, is attributable to this cause, for no other agency is powerful enough to work the ruin of a modern liner with her cellular bottom and water-tight bulkheads.
